Out in the great open country where the air is pure and free. Percival Prune, a mean man of means, sought pleasure in playing golf. Percy believed in comfort at all times and even a little speed as well for he had a team of four handy mice to carry him about in a luxurious sedan.

In the neighborhood was the garment shop, where all local maidens slaved their young lives away. In the same factory where beautiful Bertha worked her lover Buzz Mouse, the elevator boy, also worked. Their love making caused the boss to fire Bertha. The lovers seek consolation by riding their double bicycle in the open country.

Percy Prune tries to steal the beautiful Bertha he succeeds in doing so for a short time only. After a long chase the mouse lover captures and kills Percy and regains his loved one. It seems that "Heaven always protects the poor woiken goil"
